MARIE KOERNER, FRANKFORT WEDS MANTENO MAN

A very pretty wedding was solemnized in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Koerner of Frankfort, Ill., on Saturday August 14, when their youngest daughter, Marie, became the bride of Herman Weichbrodt, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Weichbrodt of Manteno, Ill.

Preceding the ceremony, Miss Bernice Weichbrodt, sister of the groom, sang, "I Love You Truly."

Promptly at 8 o'clock, Mrs. Herbert Schoop, sister of the bride, played the wedding march. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, and the groom met and together they pledged their vows beneath an arch which was beautifully decorated in the chosen colors of pink and blue and with a background made of flowers of the same shade.

The bride wore a floor length blue taffeta dress with pink accessories, and a chin veil. She carried an arm bouquet of pink roses and blue delphiniums. The only ornament worn was a locket which was a gift from the groom.

The groom's sister, Jymme Weichbrodt, as the bridesmaid, was attired in a floor length dress of pink mullins. The only ornament worn was a locket which was a gift from the groom.

After the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. G. Gerhold, pastor of St. Peter Evangelical church of Frankfort, Miss Weichbrodt sang, "The End of a Perfect Day."

A very elaborate dinner was served to guests numbering thirty-five. The table was decorated in the selected colors of the bride, while a large three layer wedding cake formed the centerpiece.

The bride chose the date to honor her grandmother, Mrs. Konow who was celebrating her 78th birthday on that day.

The young couple will for the time being, reside with the bride's parents.

Frankfort Fire Dept. To Rescind Old By-Law Rule

The Frankfort Fire Department is wrestling with a big problem which they hope however to be able to solve it before long.

It appears that the fire department has a provision in their by-laws which expressly provides that the fire truck shall not be used to fight fires outside the corporate limits of the village for the reason that if the truck was out of town fighting a fire and a fire broke out in the village, there would be no fire protection which would be a serious matter in the event of insurance adjustment in case of a fire loss.

Recently the Frankfort Fire Department was summoned to a fire on the Walter Rainford farm northeast of Frankfort, but at first they refused to respond due to the provision mentioned in their by-laws, but they finally waived the clause and went to the blaze anyway and rendered good service. They arrived at the scene of the fire about ten minutes after the Tinley Park fire department had arrived.

In order to overcome any future difficulties along this line, the fire department expects to call a meeting in the near future to consider changing the clause mentioned and also to receive donations from farmers in the Frankfort territory for the purchase of a much needed larger fire truck and equipment. By revising the by-laws and securing an adequate sized truck the Frankfort fire department will be in a position to fight fires on farms and could also provide protection for the Lincoln Estates.

MOKENA FLOWER SHOW PROVES BIG SUCCESS

The sixth annual Flower and Garden Show sponsored by the Mokena Garden Club in the Mokena public school auditorium Wednesday afternoon and evening was an enthusiastic success. The predominant flowers were gladiolus and asters.

Among the blue ribbon winners were Mrs. Harry Mall, Mrs. Nels Sorenson and Mrs. Ludwig Thiel.

There were several very beautiful commercial displays of gladiolus in the latest color development.

The baskets of asters and zinnias were a riot of color each trying to outdo the other.

John Balaz of Mokena also had a fine display of Florida exhibits including sea shells, coral, sponges, and other interesting items.

The local feature which commanded much attention and interest was the choosing of "Miss Mokena, 1937" from a list of entrants. The charming daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ludwig Thiel, Ursula, was awarded this title by the judges and she was awarded a cash prize.

In addition Audrey Mae Niethammer and Patsy Steele were awarded honorable mention.

The art display from the Forest Ridge Recreation was the center of animated groups. There were twenty-five persons having an argument as to the merit of two adjoining pictures as they had been requested to pick out the most interesting picture. A ballot box was provided and each person was given a ballot to vote. This developed a very serious discussion as there was a wide variance of pictures and tastes.

The officers of the Mokena Garden Club were very much pleased with the art work. One of them remarked "That this was a treat that we do not get very often."

Mr. George W. Kramer was in charge and the art work was done by interested neighbors of the Forest Ridge Recreation group. This is in school district No. 142. Mr. Fairbanks of Forest Ridge is president of the school board and thanks are extended to him for his courtesy and help.

Tinley Rallies To Trim Orland 5-3

Behind the effective three hit hurling of Pat Homerding, Tinley's mound ace, the local lads staged a four run seventh inning rally to win a tightly fought contest from Orland last Sunday afternoon by a five to three margin. Homerding, pitching one of his best games of the season, struck out eight while issuing only one intentional pass. Pat gave up two hits in the first inning and then settled down to work; it was the ninth inning before Orland was able to garner another safety.

Orland jumped into a three run lead with the opening gun by virtue of an error and two well hit balls one of them a long triple by Reuter. The town boys managed to push one run over in their half of the first; the result of a walk and two singles. Each pitcher, backed by air tight defense, settled down and it looked like a duel of moundmen until the last half of the seventh when the home bats began to click. This inning saw each man in the lineup facing Ludwig and resulted in four (continued on back page)

BLACKY THE CROW IS AS EXCITED AS SAMMY JAY

WHEN Sammy Jay came flying out of the Green Forest screaming at the top of his lungs and so excited that he couldn't talk straight, everybody said that he had gone crazy. You see, he was too excited to tell what the trouble was. At last his cousin, Blacky the Crow, managed to get him calmed down so that he could tell him all about it. When he heard the story which Sammy had to tell of the stranger he had seen deep in the Green Forest, est he looked very much as the other little people did when they heard Sammy screaming foolishly.

He Caught Himself Just in Time and Flew to the Top of the Nearest Pine Tree.

You see, it was very hard for Blacky to really believe that Sammy had seen what he had said he had. Not that he thought Sammy was telling a wrong story! Oh, my, no! Sammy was too much in earnest. What Blacky thought was that he had seen a lot more than he really had. You see, Blacky had lived a long time in the Green Forest and he never had seen or heard of such a stranger as Sammy told about.

He asked Sammy just where he had seen the stranger, and Sammy told him that it was way deep in the Green Forest, beyond the pond built by Paddy the Beaver. Now, Blacky believes that the only way to make sure of things is to see them, and not be content with the word of some one else. So he suddenly made up his mind that he would visit the place where Sammy Jay had seen the stranger. He invited Sammy to go along with him, but Sammy refused. It was very plain to see that Sammy was afraid of the stranger. Blacky chuckled to himself as he flew over the pond of Paddy the Beaver and so deep into the Green Forest.

"The idea," said Blacky, "of there being a stranger as big as Farmer Brown's boy and wearing a black fur coat! Nobody like that ever has lived in the Green Forest. I guess I'd know if they had. Sammy must have eaten something and had a very bad dream, or else there is something the matter with his eyes."

He was talking to himself in this way as he flew along, all the time keeping a sharp watch for the stranger, when, without any warning, the stranger himself stepped out from behind a tree almost under Blacky. It startled Blacky so that he let out a frightened "Caw! Caw!" and nearly turned a somersault in the air. He caught himself just in time and flew to the top of the nearest pine tree, where he could look down and see all that was going on.

Everything was just as Sammy had said. The stranger did wear a black fur coat, he was as big as Farmer Brown's boy, and he did have great feet and the biggest claws Blacky had ever seen. Blacky felt just as if he ought to peck himself to make sure that he was

WOOD FLOORS ON CONCRETE

ONE very common complaint that I hear is the bulging and warping of wood floors that are laid on concrete floors in cellars. A cellar floor is usually laid directly on the earth, and inevitably contains moisture. The surface may appear dry, but even so, there is a continuous passage of moisture through the floor and into the air of the cellar. When anything is laid on the concrete, evaporation is prevented; moisture collects, and wood, linoleum, rugs or anything similar will suffer. A wood floor laid on concrete is particularly likely to rot. In absorbing moisture, wood swells and buckles.

Any covering for a concrete cellar floor should be waterproof and of a material that will not rot. Asphalt, either in the form of tiles or as a sheet, is satisfactory; for moisture cannot injure it. Asphalt tiles can be had in many different colors, and form a most attractive floor. They are laid in asphalt cement, which is also used in laying asphalt in sheet form.

When a wood floor is to be laid on concrete, one method is to cement it down with a layer of the same kind of asphalt cement; "mastic" is its usual name. This is becoming a very common method of laying a wood floor on concrete, and is a complete protection against rotting.

Also, there is a pleasant springiness to the floor. A less perfect method, but one that has many advantages, is to cover the concrete with sheets of heavy waterproof felt, with the edges overlapping. Two-by-fours are put down on this, and the wood flooring laid on top. This may not give complete protection against rotting, but it is far better than to lay the wood directly on the concrete.

THE PANCAKE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

HE SAYS, when I bring home a hat,

"Where in the world did you buy that?"

"At So-and-So's, And goodness knows It's long enough since I have had one!"

"The one you have is not a bad one, But that's O. K."

But, anyway, Your friends will ask you, with that hat on,

If it was made that way, or sat on."

"Well, that's the very latest style They're wearing now, so you can smile."

He says, "No doubt, Yes, laugh right out."

What puzzles me, I can't see through it,

Why do it just because they do it?"

"Well, that's the thing In style this spring—"

"What I can't see, why spend good money

For anything to just look funny?"

We never do have spats Except on one thing, and that's hats.

You might as well Not try to tell

A man why anything's good-looking, For all he thinks about is cooking.

I'm mad tonight Enough to fight.

He said, "Ah, now I see the riddle: Is this the pancake, or the griddle?"

OCCASIONALLY one meets men and women whose greatest mental zest is found in anything which holds an element of risk. Such seem to possess the gambler's instinct, in business as well as social life. Such persons are often successful despite the dangers which their natures court; but just as often they find themselves on the "losing end of the game."

The Finger of Speculative Mentality

Even the most casual survey of this type of fourth finger will impress you with the extreme length and crookedness which are its most pronounced characteristics. The length of this type is exaggerated by its leanness and the peculiar knottiness of the knuckles. The joints are set at decided angles, which gives the entire finger a distorted appearance. This is most noticeable with the hand extended wide, when the entire finger falls far away from the third finger.

The nail tip is long and pointed with an extremely long and sharply convex nail, which is often covered with small ridges running the full depth of the nail. Under backward pressure the finger is found to be stiffly resilient.

You need have no hesitancy in placing the owner of such a fourth finger as one who is at least a gambler at heart, and who enjoys nothing better than activities governed largely by chance.

King Cobra Eats Snakes

The king cobra is cannibalistic. That is, it generally refuses to eat anything but snakes, and it likes to kill them itself and devour them as they are dying from the effects of its poison. A meal of a snake lasts the king cobra many days, depending on the size of the snake eaten. But all cobras cannot live on other snakes, and the smaller common spectacled cobra of India eats chiefly frogs, rats and small birds.

What You Seek

Have you ever thought how many objects you pass without even noticing them; how many voices and sounds fail to register with you?

It seems that one usually sees what he is looking for and hears that to which his ears are attuned.

Perhaps this is what Emerson had in mind when he said that no one brings back from Europe anything which he did not take over with him. (Excluding merchandise of course.)—Ohio Farmer.

HELP KIDNEYS

To Get Rid of Acid and Poisonous Waste

Your kidneys help to keep you well by constantly filtering waste matter from the blood. If your kidneys get functionally disordered and fail to remove excess impurities, there may be poisoning of the whole system and body-wide distress.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination may be a warning of some kidney or bladder disturbance. You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out.

In such cases it is better to rely on a medicine that has won country-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Use Doan's Pills. A multitude of grateful people recommend Doan's. Ask your neighbor!

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington. — Some years ago, when New England's sharp-tongued George H. Moses sat in the presidential officer's chair as president pro tempore of the senate, I used to marvel at the speed with which he got rid of legislation. The Republicans were in control of the senate. The late Senator Charles Curtis of Kansas was the Republican leader. Between the astute Curtis and the nimble-witted Moses, the senate many times really ran in high gear. To me, it was reminiscent of the old days, therefore, when I watched Vice President "Jack" Garner operate in the senate the other day to get the judiciary reform bill through that body without permitting a deluge of debate. I think Mr. Garner performed on that occasion with even greater finesse than did Senator Moses because Mr. Garner did not wait for cues from the floor of the senate; he simply took charge and, knowing what the job was, saw to it that things were accomplished in record time.

But the significance of this incident should not be overlooked. It was noteworthy, of course, that the senate should pass the court bill and send it to the house in a total of six hours. It was noteworthy that the Vice President established a precedent by granting permission to senators to include in the Congressional Record speeches they would have made if the debate had been prolonged. And yet it was the implication of the senate action that seems to me to be the most important phase of that situation.

The way I see the picture is this: The ease with which that bill was put through demonstrates that those who opposed the original bill to add six new justices to the Supreme court were objecting only to the court packing and not to the reforms in procedure.

The bill as it becomes law provides for a number of changes in court procedure to the end that adjudication of controversy can be accomplished much more quickly than has been the case in the past. It does not include any addition to the membership of the Supreme court and it does not include any provision for sending hand-picked judges into the various circuits and districts as the White House and the Department of Justice may decide. In other words, the new law leaves the judiciary system independent and again establishes it as a coordinate branch of the government, equal in all respects to the legislative, which is congress, and the executive, which is the President and the executive departments. There can be no doubt that this piece of legislation is worthwhile although to the layman the benefits may not immediately appear. It must be regarded, however, simply as a piece of legislation that cuts much legal red tape and those who must avail themselves of the courts or those who are forced under jurisdiction of courts will come more nearly obtaining justice than heretofore.

I have said in these columns before that when the senate refused to accept the President's orders and pass legislation that would permit him to appoint six new justices to the Supreme court at one time, the President suffered one of the worst political defeats he has ever encountered. He probably will never meet with another such disastrous setback.

It was obvious to the vast majority of senators and representatives and to observers here within six weeks after Mr. Roosevelt submitted the court packing bill that he could not force it through. He refused nevertheless to admit defeat. In consequence, it took nearly six months of bitter and futile wrangling in the senate to convince the President that he was on the wrong side of the question as far as public sentiment was concerned.

So, congress has wasted nearly all of the 1937 session on a proposition for which it was not responsible.

It may be said that congress should remain in session under those circumstances and give all of the time that is necessary to deliberation of measures before it. Yet, facts must be faced. One of these facts is that through all of the months prior to adjournment scores of members were wearing themselves down fighting against a proposition with which they could not agree. In the meantime, Washington's summer is a completely hot and humid summer. Most of the members of the senate and house are no longer boys of college age. They cannot withstand the physical rigors of heavy work under weather conditions that prevail in a Washington summer. Thus it is not strange at all that as July passed and August wore on, most of the members wanted to go to places more comfortable than the Capital city and that constituted a terrific urge to get rid of whatever legislation was before them with the very minimum of effort. In consequence, there has been some very bad legislation and congress is now wholly to blame for it.

A friend of mine, a well-known doctor, who is not a politician, knows nothing about politics—a man, in short, who minds his own business and tries to do the best job of which he is capable, asked me a question the other day that precipitated this discussion. He asked me why the newspapers throughout the country were giving so much space, front page space at that, to the political fight over the Democratic nomination for mayor in New York.

My doctor friend observed that which is true, namely, that the mayor of New York is only mayor of that city and has no jurisdiction or power anywhere else; he observed as well that New York City is simply a subdivision of the state of New York and that New York state is only one state out of forty-eight in our nation. Further, he suggested that he, and he believed millions of others, could not possibly have any interest in whether Tammany or the New Deal faction of Democrats in New York City should win the nomination and their mayoralty candidate.

Superficially, the doctor was right. His thoughts, however, do not touch the root of that situation. Fundamentally, the battle between Tammany and the Democrats in New York is a battle between the old line, conservative Democrats throughout the nation and the New Deal faction of the party which is headed by President Roosevelt. It is vitally important also to the Republicans for the reason that the Presidential election of 1940 is almost certain to be a campaign in which we will find conservatives from whatever party aligned on one hand and radicals from whatever party aligned on the other side. To that extent, the New York primary and mayoralty election is the beginning of the 1940 presidential campaign.

The bitterness that is going to prevail from here on has been given something of a preview by the charge by Senator Copeland, the Tammany candidate, that President Roosevelt was interfering in a purely local fight. Senator Copeland's activities in the senate have been almost wholly antagonistic to the President and the New Deal generally. Where the President has been sound, as the conservatives recognize sound policies, Senator Copeland has fought alongside of the New Dealers. Otherwise, he has not concealed his opposition to radical New Deal proposals.

Thus, when Senator Copeland broke openly and accused the President of stooping to local politics, he opened the way for conservatives everywhere to strike back at the political machine managed by Postmaster General Jim Farley in Mr. Roosevelt's behalf. As one house member suggested: "Senator Copeland has put fire into the fight."

The selection of Senator Copeland by the famous Tammany organization in New York City was the signal for the New Deal faction of the great city to take off their coats. They promptly announced selection of New York Supreme Court Justice Mahoney as their candidate against Copeland. There are four burrough organizations behind Mahoney. There is only the Tammany group behind Copeland. On the face of it, it would seem that the senator cannot win. The fact seems to be, however, that there will be a rather close race for the reason that some of the four organizations behind Mahoney may not be able to control the Democratic votes in their bailiwicks as entirely as Tammany Hall will control Democrats so long affiliated with that organization. Certainly, according to the best advice I can get, the Copeland charge against Mr. Roosevelt is likely to swing a good many Democrats to the Copeland ticket. This will be so because New York City always has resented outside influences in its political battles. Senator Copeland can be counted upon as well to broaden the charge so that Mr. Farley's tentacles in New York City politics where he has long been active will be made to appear like the strangling, crushing arms of an octopus. In other words, the conservatives who are supporting Copeland will not let the charge of interference by the President become of less consequence any time it is retold.

True, Secretary Marvin McIntyre of the White House staff denied that the President had talked politics with the Mahoney leaders. But the denial was not accepted by Copeland as being sincere, for he added: "I am not afraid of Mr. Roosevelt's reprisals. The President enjoys a great personal popularity, but his political popularity is swiftly disappearing."

'Way Back When

By JEANNE

SCIENTIST WAS BORN IN SLAVERY

HIS master traded a broken-down race horse, worth about $300, for George Washington Carver when he was a little pickaninny just before the Civil war. Today, he is the pride of the negro race. A worn-out speller was the only education available to him until he was ten years old, when he attended a small school in Neosho, Mo. He slept in a barn there and did odd jobs to earn a living while learning. The young negro boy's thirst for knowledge grew, and he went on to finish his elementary school education in Fort Scott, Kan., where he worked as a hotel cook, a dishwasher, and a housekeeper. Later he bent over wash tubs night after night doing laundry for people, to pay his way through high school. He worked as a hotel clerk for awhile and then entered Simpson college at Indianola, Iowa, where he earned his tuition by doing odd jobs.

Three years later, George Washington Carver went on to Iowa State university, graduating with a degree in agriculture. In two more years he won his Master of Science degree, and was made a member of the faculty, so impressive were his accomplishments in agricultural chemistry. In 1897, he took charge of the agricultural department at Tuskegee institute, in Alabama, leading negro university.

The contributions George Washington Carver has made to agriculture of the South are outstanding. He was among the first to advocate crop rotation for worn-out soil and he has developed hundreds of commercially useful articles from the principal agricultural products of Southern states. From the peanut alone Carver made 285 products and from the sweet potato 118. Thomas A. Edison once invited him to work with him, but he preferred to concentrate on problems of southern agriculture.

In addition to his prominence in science, George Washington Carver is an accomplished musician.

STAR PITCHER WAS A COTTON PICKER

JEROME HERMAN (DIZZY) DEAN was born in Lucas, Ark., in 1911. Son of a poor cotton picker, he was forced to quit school when he reached the fourth grade, because the family was so poor that the 50 cents a day he could earn in the cotton fields was a necessity.

Under-nourished, poorly clothed and uneducated, as he was, Dizzy Dean always had confidence in himself. Perhaps that explains why he was able to develop what small advantages circumstances in life allowed him, and develop them to championship quality. Confidence and a strong right arm hardened in the cotton fields were Dizzy's equipment for facing life.

He learned to throw a baseball with amazing speed and control. In 1929, he was signed up by Don Curtiss, scout for the Cardinals' Texas league. The salary was comparatively small, but it looked like a fortune to the former cotton picker. After training in Houston, he was shipped to St. Joseph, Mo., where his confidence and fast pitching won 17 games. Transferred to Houston, he developed rapidly and soon became star pitcher for the St. Louis Cardinals. Meantime, his brother Paul, or "Daffy," also won a pitching berth on the Cardinals'. Dizzy was always the more spectacular, the higher paid, and the more widely publicized. He has endorsed many advertised products, made a motion picture, appeared in vaudeville, and spoken over the radio. His recent earnings have been $40,000 or more per year.

2. How many of our Presidents owned slaves?
3. Who first discovered the principles of magnetism?

7. Are all eyes of the same size?
8. How is salt secured?

Answers

1. The Panama canal office says that the Empress of Britain was the largest liner to pass through the canal. It was also the liner to pay the largest fee, which was $18,941.25.
2. Ten Presidents owned slaves: Washington, Monroe, Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, Tyler, Polk, Taylor, Johnson and Grant. Lincoln never owned slaves.

3. Discovery of the simple principles of magnetism possessed by magnetite, or loadstone, was made by Chinese in 1400 B. C., or 3,500 years before magnetism was known in Europe.

4. The Great Lakes have approximately the following elevations above sea level: Superior, 602 feet; Michigan, 581; Huron, 581; Erie, 241; and Ontario, 246 feet.

5. A 14.1 inch cube of gold weighs a ton.

6. Roman senators were appointed for life unless expelled from office for some dishonorable cause.

7. Contrary to general opinion, says a specialist, there is no small eye or large eye. All eyes are approximately of the same size. The reason for the apparent difference depends upon the orifice or aperture through which the eyes are seen. It is the variable diameter of this opening that creates the erroneous impression of different sizes of eyes.

8. There are three ways in which salt may be secured: First, by mining; second, by evaporation of sea water; and third, by digging wells until a salt vein is struck and then pouring water and pumping it up again as brine.

Life's Tenderness

What seems to grow fairer to me as life goes by is the love and grace and tenderness of it; not its wit and cleverness and grandeur of knowledge (grand as knowledge is), but just the laughter of little children and the friendship of friends; the cozy talk by the fireside; the sight of flowers and the sound of music.—John Green.

You'll Do It

THERE are thousands to tell you it cannot be done, There are thousands to prophesy failure; There are thousands to point out to you, one by one, The dangers that wait to assail you.

But just buckle right in with a bit of a grin, Then take off your coat and go to it. Just start in to sing as you tackle the thing That cannot be done, and you'll do it.

THE AMAZING New Firestone

GROUND GRIP TIRE

PROVIDES GREATER DRAWBAR PULL, GREATER TRACTION AND SAVES MORE TIME AND FUEL

NEWS of the amazing performance of the NEW Firestone Ground Grip Tire is sweeping rural America. Farmers everywhere who have seen this new tire are so enthusiastic about it that sales have been climbing steadily upward and production has been greatly increased to meet the demand.

Why all this enthusiasm? Those of you who have seen the new Firestone Ground Grip Tire in action know the answer. Tests show that it will pull a three-bottom plow under soil conditions where other makes of tires can pull only a two-bottom plow. The re-designed tread gives greater traction and better self-cleaning action. It will not pack the soil—in fact, it leaves a mulch on the surface of the tread track that prevents rapid evaporation of moisture in the soil. These tests also show up to 30% more available drawbar pull on dry sod, up to 40% more on dry plowed ground, up to 50% more on wet plowed ground than with any other tire tested.

Only in Firestone Tires do you get so many patented extra-quality features. The Ground Grip Tread is patented and is made of specially compounded rubber which resists the action of sun, rain and snow. Gum-Dipping is a patented Firestone Process, by which every fiber of every cord in every ply is saturated with liquid rubber which gives added strength to resist the strain of heavy pulling. The Two Extra Layers of Gum-Dipped Cords under the tread are patented. This Firestone construction feature binds the tread and cord body into one inseparable unit.

You want and need ALL these features. Only Firestone has them! See this new tire at your nearest Firestone Implement Dealer, Tire Dealer or Auto Supply & Service Store today.

Storm Havoc Not Seen In Hybrid Fields

Recent storms have brought about outstanding pictures of differences between our old time open pollinated corn and properly selected strains of Hybrid Corn. So pronounced and markedly different are the appearances of these two types of fields that, to use the words of Blackstone, "he who runs may read."

You will note the use above of the term "properly selected" Hybrid Seed Corn. There are wider differences in strains of hybrid than in open pollinated corn. In the production of hybrid seed some strains have been produced in which all of the stalks, even without a wind, are too weak to stand and fall over.
Others producing nubbins for ears that only carry a few kernels. Hybridizing without selection does not mean anything. Inbreeding by self-ing corn intensifies the many characters of inherited difference, and it is the high type of selections of the right intensifications and cross breeding these together, (adding what we call hybrid vigor to the progeny), that makes the outstanding strains of hybrid seed for farm use.

The layman can possibly better appreciate the difference of selection of pure line inbreds when it is realized that the inbreds that carry the high potential strains of germ plasm are themselves in their growing form draws and makes only small ears for propagation. The skill of the art of selection lies in the talent to properly read and interpret the visible characters of the inbred, which are so different in appearance from what we commonly know as the characters of good high yielding corn. These characters only become assuredly known through years of patient toil in breeding and cross breeding, and proving what their progeny will reproduce in pure line form.

The skill lies in recognizing and having made the happy selections from thousands of growing inbred plants. Many people regard this skill as an inborn talent, as distinguished from mere acquisition, and similar to the talent of artists and prominent musicians. While many hybrids have been developed and many are at work in the field, those that have thus far made the outstanding selections are rare as well as are the selections of outstanding value.

Leaning and twisted stalks are not the only difference between open pollinated and hybrid corn.
The right hybrids have bigger ears, well balanced, which reflect a more extensive root system that has held the stalks erect, during the storm and will continue the processes of maturing, while leaning stalks with severed or torn roots make little headway in ripening.

We will not long have this picture of field difference for our guidance in the matter of hybrid selection, and visits should be made during the next month to different hybrid fields for building up our knowledge and information on hybrid. Five years from now most farmers will be growing hybrid. Ten years hence a farmer that persists in growing open pollinated corn in competition with the farming groups that have the advantage of hybrid will likely drop out of the race.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"MIND" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, August 22.

The Golden Text was, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus" (Philippians 2:5).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "O the depths of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord?
or who hath been his counsellor?
For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever" (Romans 11:33, 34, 36).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook,
"Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy:
"Divine metaphysics, as revealed to spiritual understanding, shows clearly that all is Mind, and that Mind is God, omnipotence, omnipresence, omniscience,—that is, all power, all presence, all Science.
Hence all is in reality the manifestation of Mind" (p. 275).

Jesus is the Available Friend for every man and woman on earth who will so accept Him. Obedience is the condition in His fellowship. That means a transformed life for He said, "Ye must be born again."

(John 3:7).

Therefore if any man be in Christ he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to Himself by Jesus Christ. (II. Cor. 5:17,

Pickled Pine

Pickled pine is pine which has been subjected to a chemical treatment which ages it and gives to the wood surface something of the soft patina of old pine or "deal" from which the paint has been stripped. Pine was used for room interiors and furniture in England in the Eighteenth century, but it was never left in its natural state. For room panelling it was painted; for furniture—bookcases, cupboards and furniture—it was also painted, and for mirror frames, for which it was often used because it was easily carved, it was either painted or gilded.

Early Agriculture in Ohio

So independent were the early Ohioans on agriculture that most other endeavors were considered fruitless.For example, when a young physician wanted to become the husband of Gov.
Duncan McArthur's daughter, the father questioned the possibility of the young man earning a livelihood in this profession.

NEW PAINTING IN MEMORY OF LINCOLN'S LOVE FOR CHILDREN

Copyright 1937, The Lincoln Nat'l Life Ins. Co.

Dedication plans introducing a new humanized Lincoln painting by J. C. Leyendecker include a search for women who as young girls were personally greeted by Abraham Lincoln.

The painting commissioned by the Lincoln National Life Insurance Company of Fort Wayne, Ind., commemorates Lincoln's great friendliness for little girls. The names of as many of those whom he greeted which can now be learned will be inscribed on a scroll and affixed to the picture.

Among the thirty-eight names already enrolled are: Grace Bedell, the eleven-year-old whom Lincoln greeted at Westfield, New York, after she had written that he would look better if he wore whiskers; Viola Hutchinson, of the famous singing family, whom Lincoln called the "Little Lady"; Olivia Leidy, an orphan girl of Springfield, whom Lincoln took to the circus with his small boys; Julia Taft, frequent visitor at the White House, whom Lincoln called "Julie"; Mary Neilson, the loyal Virginia girl, whom Lincoln befriended for her courage, and of course the little girl whom Lincoln befriended by carrying her trunk to the depot.

The first place award to the young woman is a $200 diamond ring; second place award is a $100 diamond while third is a $50 wrist watch.

A total of $450 in cash awards are offered in the three divisions of the inter-state drum and bugle corps parade which will get under way at 3 p. m., Sunday September 5th and march over a mile route in Blue Island from the south side of the city to the exhibition grounds along Western avenue all the way.

Who Pays The National Debt? By RAYMOND PITCAIRN National Chairman Sentinels of the Republic

Out of the welter of political news emanating from Washington during recent weeks has come a cheering statement.

It is that the administration has renewed its promise to work toward a balanced budget.

With a national debt hovering around the $37,000,000 mark—highest in our history—and a growing deficit, the American people will hope that that promise is fulfilled.

It means so much to them! Why?

Because, as all economists point out, public debt means merely postponed taxes, and taxes mean a slash out of every worker's income.

This is obviously true when the worker pays his taxes directly. And it is just as true when he pays them indirectly—for our so-called "painless taxes" hit both the man who produces the goods on which they are levied and the consumer who ultimately purchases them in the form of food, or clothes, or shelter, or the necessary tools and equipment of his vocation.

Moreover, as economists point out further, heavy debts and their ominous threat of increased taxes curtail production, and with it employment. And it is primarily to increased employment with its spread of earnings among all citizens that every producer, whether on the farm or in the many fields of business activity, must look for restoration of the purchasing power on which depends his livelihood.

For progress toward a balanced budget, discharges point out, certain brakes on Federal spending are required. They include an effort on the part of the heads of the many departments, bureaus and commissions at Washington to keep within their budget estimates.

Those brakes should be applied. Certainly that is not too much to ask of our office-holders, when it influences so deeply the income and living standards of the American people.

Politicians create the Public Debt. But the workers—and their families—pay it.

ORLAND PARK

Floyd and Merrill Cooper, Stanley Cooper and Martin Steinhagen have returned from an interesting vacation trip.

The first interesting stop was the Greater Cleveland Exposition on Lake Erie. Then a general tour of the town. The first night's rest did not do much good as it consisted of sleeping on tables in the open because of a shortage of cabins.

The next large city was Buffalo,

New York. A visit to the beautiful Niagara Falls. They were viewed from the American side, then across the bridge to the Canadian side. Here you have to fill out a special permit to enter. The view of the Falls from the Canadian side is the best. When lighted at night it is more than beautiful.

Toronto, Canada is a city offering many interesting places. Those viewed were the University of Toronto, Casa Loma (Castle), Canadian National Exhibition Park, Royal Ontario Museum and Parliament Buildings.

Canada, the land of lakes, makes it very interesting while driving. A few miles east of a small town named Callender can be viewed those famous five Dionne quintuplets in their own little play ground.

The farthest northern town visited was North Bay on Lake Nipissing. At Copper Cliff, we saw two large copper and nickel smelting factories. Visited Sault Ste. Marie, the large city on the Canadian border. We then ferried across to the United States and visited the large Island of Mackinac and rode around the lakes. From the northern part of Michigan at St. Ignace, we ferried to Mackinaw City a ferry ride of seven miles.

During the course of the trip, all five of the great lakes were seen as well as all principle cities. The miles we traveled was 1700.

Judge Louis Raschke has begun building operations on his new residence located to the north of his present lunch room and filling station. The dwelling will consist of 6 rooms will be modern in every way.

J. F. Schmadeke is busy setting up new corn binders this week.

John Burkhardt and Barney Moore attended the Cub ball game in Chicago Tuesday.

This year Orland will not stage a Labor Day celebration.

Merrill and Floyd Cooper have returned from an auto vacation trip thru the east and Canadian points.

Mr. and Mrs. Russell Myrick have returned from a pleasant trip thru Indiana, Ohio and Canada.

Rev. Manly Mumford, pastor of the Orland Park M. E. church will be on vacation Sunday, hence there will be no preaching service this Sunday, but Sunday school will be held at the usual time. A week from Sunday the regular church service will be held.

While Wm. Heiting was working at the Southmoor Country Club on Monday he accidentally ran the tines of a hay fork thru his right foot. He has been under the care of Dr. S. Leavitt.

Earl Reich has returned from the Blue Island hospital.

The Guild of the Orland Park M. E. church met Thursday.

A number of Orland people attended the flower show held by the Mokena Garden Club at the Mokena public school Wednesday.

Traffic on Wolf road south of the junction with Maple road was detoured the forepart of the week due to repairs being made on the Wabash railroad crossing.

The Orland Park public school is open for the new school year on Tuesday, September 7th.

A Comedy of Errors or How Not To Play Baseball

A nine act play starring the Mokena Orioles vs. Bar Senators.

The Mokena Orioles were a great object lesson for all base ball players who don't practice and think they are good.

The boys have been playing swell baseball all season but a two week's lay-off and no practice sure put the boys behind the well known eight ball.

In the first inning the Senators sent no less than 11 men to bat and scored just a mere 6 runs.

The slaughter was only over in the 9th inning after the Senators had scored a mere 16 runs.

George Lauffer started the pitching job for Mokena. Yours truly thinks he had painter's colic or something. He was backed by eight-so ball players who made the Flat Bush Tumblers look like stars.

George Haefline took up the pitching job on the fifth inning for Mokena and held the Senators to 4 runs on two hits. A neat piece of relief work I say.

I won't give you the box score, it's too awful, but here's the score—Senators: 16 runs, 11 hits; Mokena: 2 runs 4 hits.

We are in the Will county tournament and hope to give you fans real base ball for the remainder of the season.

I've regusted, Joe.

Benefits From Forests

The benefits from forests are many. The most important are: Protection from soil erosion; retention of rainfall by the spongy layer of leaf mold on the forest floor; lessening of the occurrence of floods; purification of the air by the inhalation of carbon dioxide and exhalation of oxygen by the leaves of the trees; Improvement of fishing and hunting; the profitable use of lands which are of no value except for forests.

● Tell him of the value, educationally, he will derive from reading this noted feature writer's historical articles as they appear regularly in this paper. He will probably say: "Sure, I like history, Pop, but . . ." But too often it's ponderous and drained of the vitality that makes history the stirring story that it is. Then reveal to him the skill with which this man makes dramatic phases of his country's history read like lively fiction.

WNU Service.

He crept to a window and peered in. Dark as pitch except for a white blur. That must be the cover of Aunt Mary Amanda's old limousine. Why was the unused car directly opposite the door? He remembered now. Jed had told him that he had o. k'd an offer Henri Jacques had reported for the out-of-date machine. Probably the butler had planned to drive it off in the morning.

The man who had just made his get-away had stopped here. Why? Had he hidden loot? The silver? But the silver had been in the storeroom only a few hours ago. A few hours! Much could happen in a few hours while the occupants of the Other House had been at supper at the Reyburns'. He'd better investigate. Lucky he still carried the key to his aunt's garage on his ring. In the days when they had been friendly, she had insisted upon his having a key to the house as well. Soundlessly he slid back the door, squeezed in, closed and locked it.

With the light in his torch dimmed, he tiptoed carefully between the automobiles. Brooke's long, sleek town car. Sam's convertible coupe. The white cloth cover of the old limousine was awry as if it had been hastily adjusted. Part of it lay on the floor. What was that mark? A footprint! A footprint faint but bloody!

With a childish impulse to clutch their coats and keep the men with her, Brooke Reyburn had listened to the closing of the door behind Mark Trent and Jed Stewart. They had pleaded an early morning start for the city, but she was sure that they had gone because they resented Jerry Field's sulky silence. She would have been glad to get away from his gloomy presence herself. She glanced at him as he stood before the fire. From the back of the house came the crash of dishes, a shout of laughter.

Brooke sprang to her feet. "I wonder what went then. I suspect that Lucette and Sam started rough-housing and that Daphne was drawn into the scuffle. I should have known better than to let them wash the dishes. Come on, Jerry. Let's investigate. I'd rather know the worst at once."

Field straightened and thrust his hands hard into his pockets.

"Same here, Brooke. I want to know what you were doing in Mark Trent's house while we were at rehearsal."

"Why should you think I had been in his house?"

"Didn't Stewart find a gardenia outside his front door?"

"So what? I suppose there couldn't be another woman in the world who might call on Mr. Trent wearing a flower, or did you corner the gardenia market today, Jerry?" Field's expression changed from gloom to cheer.

"There's something in that. Trent certainly is a wow with the ladies. I hear that he could dine out three times an evening if he'd accept the invitations heaped on him. It gets me why he settled down in this burg. Don't be sore at me, sweet thing. Wasn't it natural for me to think the flower yours when Stewart produced the gardenia that he found at Trent's front door when you weren't wearing any?"

Before she could answer she heard someone approaching.

She drew a breath of relief as Sam and the two girls entered.

"What smashed in the kitchen, Sam? I thought the chimney had fallen in."

"Nothing but a stack of those warranted unbreakable plates Clotilde keeps things on in the ice-box. And did they crack up? The floor looked as if there'd been a snowstorm."

"The sound brought Henri down the back stairs in a hurry. Ever seen him in his robe de nuit, Brooke?"

"What a giggler you are, Lucette! Of course I haven't."

"You've missed the laugh of your life. He was something straight out of a Cruikshank edition of Dickens. Night cap with tassel; night shirt, I believe it was called back in the dark ages; thin bow legs, and flapping slippers."

"Was he embarrassed?"

"He was not. He behaved more as if he were afraid we'd miss the appeal of his costume. He ran around like this." She trotted across the floor.

Lucette frowned at Field. "Can't you smile for the lady, Jerry? I'll tell you one thing. I'd rather be a giggler than a gob of gloom. Good-night!" She dashed from the room. Daphne ran into the hall.

"Lucette, don't forget that Mark Trent is giving us a party tomorrow night at that swell new Supper club."

Lucette hung over the mahogany rail. "Forget! Not a chance. Think I'll forget a night off from rehearsal? Nothing short of an act of God will keep me away. Sam, the old tyrant, is giving us a break. I'll be seeing you."

Jerry Field picked up his sister's coat.

"Come on, Daph, let's go. If I'd known that we were to have a night off, I would have taken you dining and dancing, Brooke."

"Nice of you, but I think that a party will be heaps more fun."

"You would think that. I don't know why but this whole evening has gone haywire. Come on, Daph." Daphne Field snuggled her hand in Sam Reyburn's.

"Good-night, Sammy. Don't love me much, do you, darling?"

Sam shook off her hand. "I'll love you when you learn your lines, and what's more, if you don't learn 'em, you'll be tossed off the lot."

"You mean that I'll be fired?"

Daphne opened her eyes at their widest. "I, fired, after I've had gowns made to wear that will simply stop the show? Come on, Jerry. Nobody likes us here."

From the threshold she threw a kiss to Sam.

He grinned.

"Sam, do you like Daphne?"

asked Brooke.

"She's good fun. Swell looker, isn't she?"

In the room she had made her boudoir, Brooke slipped out of the lace frock. If only she could shed with it the haunting sense of having said the wrong thing. She had been bitterly unkind when she had reminded Mark Trent of his divorce. If she could apologize to him and get it off her mind, it would help. Well, she couldn't. Perhaps if she wore the hair shirt of remorse for a while, it would teach her to guard her tongue.

In a heavily embroidered Chinese house-coat of vivid green, she pulled forward the chair at her desk and began writing a letter to her mother.

Suddenly she looked up at the mirror, and her heart mounted to her throat and stuck there, beating, beating. Reflected in the lookingglass, the silver-shot hanging between bedroom and boudoir filled and swung like the sail of a boat. What had set it in motion? Had a window been opened? She was too far from the bell to ring. Suppose she rang? Who would answer? Henri and Clotilde were locked in their room probably. What should she do? She stared at the mirror. How could a person get in? From the balcony under the bath-room window? That meant that he had come through Mark Trent's house. Was it the black-gloved man who had been in the attic this evening?

Her Heart Mounted to Her Throat and Stuck There.

She swallowed her heart. She couldn't sit here forever. She must move. How still the room was! The silence of fear enveloped her like a cold mist and turned her fingertips to ice. Perhaps she was in a nightmare and could waken herself. Glorious thought. She'd scream.

Her mouth remained open as a hatless man in blue denim slipped past the swaying hanging. His head was wet and sleek as a seal's; his face below his eyes—bad eyes—was so thickly plastered with white as to be unrecognizable. He gave one furtive glance over his shoulder before he flitted in ghostly silence from the room.

Brooke pulled out the drawer of her desk. It crashed to the floor spilling the contents. Maddening! It would do that when she was in a hurry. On her knees she scrambled after an electric torch which had rolled under a chair. She dashed to the hall. Who was the man? What was the stuff on his face? She'd never forget those wicked eyes above a smear of white. The house was dark and still. She ran toward Sam's room. Stopped. Better not start him on a man hunt. He was so impetuous. How did she know that the intruder hadn't a gun? She must go Scotland Yard herself.

The hall clock told the hour. The sound echoed through the house. Only twelve? It seemed hours since she had said good-night to Sam in the living-room, and years since Mark Trent and Jed Stewart had gone home. She tiptoed to the balcony and listened.

A squeak! She put her hand hard over her heart to stop its thumping. Was a window being opened cautiously? If only the wind would stop for a minute.

Had the squeak come from the next room which was being used for scenery? It had a small iron balcony like the one which connected Lookout House and Mark Trent's. A person might easily slide down the trellis.

She tiptoed into the room and closed the door softly behind her. This must be the window that had squeaked; it was wide open. It had been closed this afternoon when she had come in to scatter green paint on the flats and to give another splash of red to the peak of roof on the backdrop.

She flashed her light around the room then on the floor over which a sheet had been spread. A can of red paint had been overturned! It was sluggishly spreading.

Tipped over recently! Slowly Brooke's light traveled. A red footprint! Uncannily like a bloody one. The man must have stepped into the thick paint. Another! One beyond that under the window. Cautiously she followed the trail. A smooch of red on the window sill. He had gone that way. Was he on the balcony? What would she see if she looked out? She must look out. She wouldn't close her eyes tonight unless she knew that the man had gone—where, she wouldn't care, if he were gone.

She leaned out cautiously. There was nothing human in sight, only a one-eyed moon was watching through a maze of branches. Cold winter moonlight turned a towering hemlock to purple, shadows to amethyst, and scattered a shimmering trail of golden topaz on the dark water of the harbor. Had one of the shadows moved down by the tree?

It had. That meant that the man was out of the house! She cautiously closed and locked the window. Pulled the hangings across it. That was that! She curtained the other window, turned to switch on the wall light. Stopped. The door was opening! A glare of light. Had the man come back? Had he a pal? Had her heart parked in her throat forever? She couldn't see, but she could still hear:

"Well, for the love of Mike!"

The wall light snapped on.

Brooke's blood, which she had thought frozen, surged through her veins. Sam was staring at her, Sam in pink and white pajamas which made him look for all the world like an animated stick of striped candy. His copper colored hair was on end; without his spectacles his eyes were big and dark and vague. He shook her arm.

"Hey! Snap out of it, Brooke! Have you got that darn scenery so on your mind that you're walking in your sleep to sling paint in here?" Brooke swallowed the lump in her throat.

"I wasn't asleep, Sam, and I wasn't slinging paint. I heard something." Her voice sounded hoarse to herself.

"A window being opened? That's what I heard. But how could you get here so soon?"

Breathlessly she told him of the man who had slipped through her room, of following him into the hall.

"You're kidding! No? Then why didn't you yell for me?"

"You're so reckless, Sam, I was afraid you might be hurt."

"That's the funniest thing I ever heard. How about yourself? Beat it back to bed. Sam the boy sleuth is hot on the trail."

"You mustn't go downstairs."

"Who says I mustn't. I'll snoop around outside to be sure the guy has gone. Beat it."

"If you go down, I go too."

"Oh all right, all right. I know better than to argue with you when you use that tone, Brooke. Got a flash? We'll creep down the back stairs. Follow me. We'll get into the front of the house that way."

He switched out the wall light, opened the door and stood motionless, listening.

"Let's go!"

Brooke nodded in response to his whisper. The hall seemed miles long as she tiptoed through the dark; the back stairs endless in number as she stole down, stopping at every creak, holding her breath at every sound which echoed as if amplified in the walls.

Sam stopped at the kitchen door to listen. Crept on to the front hall. Brooke controlled an hysterical urge to laugh as she stole after him.

"The Reyburns go sleuthing," she thought, and chuckled.

She felt Sam's quick turn and glare, though she couldn't see it. The turn was catastrophic. He lurched into a chair. His muttered, "Thunder!" was submerged in a hoarse command:

"Don't move! I've got you covered!"

CHAPTER VIII

The dusk about Mark in the garage went black. A bloody footprint! Had the crime horror spread to this small point of land? Brooke! Had anything happened to her? The possibility stopped his heart. He had been so intent upon finding Jed, upon identifying the prowler that he had not thought of danger to the occupants of Lookout House. Sam was there. Nothing could happen to his sister with that boy near. Why was he letting his imagination loose? Would a man who stopped for a shave and a bath in the midst of house-entering be guilty of a bloody crime? But—the footprint!

Lesson for August 29

GOD CONDEMNS
INTEMPERANCE.

LESSON TEXT—Leviticus 10:1, 2, 8-11; Proverbs 31:4, 5; Isaiah 28:1-8; Romans 14:21.

GOLDEN TEXT—Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise. Prov. 20:1.

PRIMARY TOPIC—What a Wise King said.

JUNIOR TOPIC—When a Man Drinks.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Drinking Harms Others.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Why Beverage Alcohol Is a Social Foe.

The use of intoxicating liquors is financially unprofitable to the nation, scientifically unwise and destructive, socially degrading, and morally wrong.

I. The Problem.

The selected Old Testament scriptures which comprise our lesson present the use of intoxicants as causing four socially undesirable results.

1. Religious disobedience (Lev. 10:1,2; Isa. 28:7). Two things we may rightfully expect of those who serve the nation in its religious life:

(1) a vision of God and obedience to that vision in life and service, and (2) the exercise of sound God-guided judgment in the affairs of the people. But note what happens when the prophet and the priest turn to wine and strong drink. "They err in vision" (Isa. 28:7). That is, they have no clear concepts of divine truth, and lead the people into error.

Further, we see that "they stumble in judgment." To every true servant of God comes repeatedly the opportunity and the need of rendering judgment, that is, of advising and counselling those to whom he ministers. If his mind is befuddled by the use of alcohol (or, for that matter, of any other kind of worldly indulgence) he will "stumble," and cause his people to stumble.

A sad incident is related in Lev. 10:1,2 of the sons of Aaron, appointed to the priesthood and instructed in its privileges and duties, but coming with strange fire to be offered before the Lord. Swift and terrible was the judgment they received. We are not told directly that they were intoxicated, but it is implied in the fact that there is an immediate injunction against the use of wine by the priests.

Lest someone think that such a thing could not happen in our day the writer mentions word which recently came to him that a leading seminary has professors on its staff who defend the so-called moderate use of alcoholic drink.

2. Political disorder (Prov. 1:5). While political leaders make sanctionous protestations that government agencies are not influenced by the liquor interests, it is common knowledge to even those who are slightly informed that the two are closely associated. The result of that unholy alliance is rightly described in Prov. 31:5—"They forget the law, and pervert the judgment of any of the afflicted." Much of the sad disorder in the body politic is traceable directly to the door of the makers and sellers of alcoholic beverages.

3. National decay (Isa. 28:1-6). "Overcome with wine"—stricken down, useless in life, without true ambition, such is the picture of the man who gives himself to drink. Poverty, with all its attendant social problems, follows on the heels of the sale and use of intoxicants. Some liquor dealers are beginning to sense a rising tide of opposition to their business, and are advertising, "We do not want bread money," but the fact is that it is all too often bread money that goes for liquor, and the vile stuff is still on sale where the poor man may readily spend his "bread money" for it.

4. Personal degradation (Isa. 28:8). "Vomit and filthiness" are not very nice words, but they describe accurately the ultimate condition of the drinker and his surroundings. The writer knows a young man who boasts that he never gets drunk because the "booze" makes him so sick that he vomits it up. Imagine a supposedly intelligent man drinking stuff so vile that his stomach (evidently having more sense than his head) sends it back—and then boasting of his ability to drink more!

II. The Solution, a Divine Principle (Rom. 14:21).

Thousands of Christian people have solved not only the drink problem, but practically every question of conduct and social life by applying this principle. Surely no true follower of Christ will be guilty of doing anything that will cause any brother to be offended, to stumble, or to be made weak.

Foundations

The foundation of domestic happiness is faith in the virtue of woman; the foundation of political happiness is confidence in the integrity of man; the foundation of happiness, temporal and eternal, is reliance on the goodness of God.—Lander.

Reading Good Books

Book love is your pass to the greatest and purest and the most perfect pleasures that God has prepared for His creatures.

Fine Feathers for Three

SEW-YOUR-OWN wouldn't be your weather prophet for the world, but you know, Milady, and so does S-Y-O, that it's always fair weather when good fashions get together. Which brings us to today's three sparkling new frocks—a whole crowd of style for the pretty part of any man's family.

A Fun Frock.

Rain, nor gloom, nor a flat tire (either kind), can dampen the spirits of the girl who wears this buoyant, young sports frock (above left) on her daily rounds—be they on the fairway, the campus, behind the counter, or merely from pillar to post. You can easily see why it's a winner: a button-all-the-way front, the matched collar and general shipshape styling make it just that. It's surefire in acetate, or silk crepe.

Here's to Mothers.

Sew-Your-Own loves nothing more than catering to mother's wardrobe needs. The frock above (center) is for all mothers: old sweet ones, young darling ones, yes, even for mothers-to-be. It is easy to run up, easy to do up, and best of all, easy to look at.

Little Brown Girl.

An all-over suntan is her forte, and many sunny days are ahead for young Miss Fortunate whose mommy chooses to interpret the fetching model at the right. A scallop-edged waist front accentuates her figure.

Uncle Phil Says:

Leisure is a Stimulant

Efficiency whets the appetite for leisure. And the latter stimulates the former.

He who borrows and never repays is too great a coward to steal.

Folks who hit the high spots are presently going so fast that the high spots hit them.

To remain young in thought doesn't mean to turn handsprings.

That, Too, Can Hurt

Many a man is liable to think his character has been defamed, when it has only been defined.

Satan finds some mischief for idle hands to do—with the ardent assistance of the owner of the idle hands.

Men first learned in a barber shop the courtesy of "waiting their turn."

POP— Foolish Question

By J. MILLAR WATT

Curse of Progress

English Lesson
It was Timothy's first day at school. He walked up to the teacher's desk and announced: "I ain't got no pencil!"
Shocked at his expression, the teacher explained, "Oh, Timothy, I have no pencil."
A sympathetic look crossed the small boy's face, and he replied: "You ain't either? Well, we're both in the same fix."

Discreet
Young Man—Why do you keep a parrot?
Very Old Man—Because I like to hear it talk. The parrot is the only creature gifted with the power of speech that is content to repeat just what it hears without trying to make a long story of it.

Thus the scoring ended and gain the limelight changed to the pitchers. Ludwig, altho hit freely, managed to keep the hits well scattered to prevent Tinley from running up the score.

Tinley thru this victory tightened their grip on the second place pole in the Southwest Suburban League and are now lying just two games out of first place. Worth, the pace setter, have yet to play Orland and Calumet Park before annexing their second straight championship.

With three more league contests remaining Tinley will travel to 93rd and Cicero next Sunday to take on the Evergreen Parkers.

Government Printing Office

The act of congress authorizing the government printing office was passed in 1800, but the actual establishment took place March 4, 1861.

SAVE and SACK the BEANS

WHILE chopping and storing the hay, the new Letz mill with grain separator sacks the beans. Saving high priced beans soon pays for a Letz—the surest money maker for any livestock farm.

Says Letz user, Lee Chatham, Danville, Indiana, "We chopped and blew into the mow 72 acres of soybean hay. We sacked 1,000 bushels of Manchu beans, keeping some for seed, recleaning and selling the rest for $1.25 per bushel. These beans brought us in over $1000.00."

Come in and investigate this wonderful machine. For most farmers feeding beef or dairy cattle, lambs or hogs, the Letz mill saves its cost and more the first season used. Let us demonstrate one for you.
